WHAT THE HOUSE OF COMMONS CAN DO. It is wonderful, when it sets about it, what the House of Commons can get through in the space of six hours. It can read a third time and pass six private Bills about gas, roads, and railways. It can receive petitions about various niessures so numerous that we cannot attempt to count or analyse them. It can question the Government, about Irich elections, trade licenees, examina. tions, the Doan and Chapter of Westminster, Poplar, distress, the Duke of Wellington's monnment, and turnpike trusts. It can dicuss and decide pon four instructions to its own committee, one which was supposed a few hours beforthand to be equivalent to a vote of non-confidence in the Ministry, with, by way of interlude, a fierce little speech about Irish electionsering tactics. It can listen tranquilly, with occasional bursts of laughter; to the amenities of thrust and parry indulged in by such lively orators as Mr. Osborne samplified and gave its reply. In short, the presence of a few having a frontage of Eighty-three feet on fools on such occasions dulls the force of the Wellington and Gage Streets, and of two hundred blows delivered. They act the part of the com- and twenty-nine feet on Aberdeen Street, compound which, when mixed with ganpowder. renders it non-explosive; and society, which if exclusively formed of elever men would be a mayo arena for intellectual gladiatum, becomes colerably tranquil by reason of its fools. In all these, and in many more examples which might be given of the beneficent effects of a certain admixture of folly, we have been merely considering the stupid variety of a fool, It must be admitted that the clever fool does not possess this admirably tranquillizing influence. On the contrary, he is one of the disburbing elements of society. A man who has plenty of brains, but little wisdom, must of course nursue an erratic and incalculable course. His political function is obvious. He may be used to demonstrate the futility of new reforms, when he acts as a leader; or, when acting under more espable guidance, to supply the rank and file of forlore hopes. There are many clever men who have a talent for making any cause they adopt ridiculous-whether regetarianism, or the conversion of the Jews, or menhood suffrage and it is a fortunate coincidence, when such men adopt a cause ridiculous in itself. The o the popular mind is to associate it irretricvably with an absurd character. In the case of genuine reforms, which have vitality enough to survive the satire directed against most incipient reforms, the clever fool is equally useful as a ridicule conductor. He is an involuntary martyr, who advertises his cause sufficiently to at-

of heing in the wrong.

that virtue in moderation is on the whole a good thing even in this life; but virtue, when it takes the common form of wrong-headed conscientiousness, is a highly objectionable peculiarity in rulers. A man of first-rate ability generally does more good than havin as a ruler, because it is obviously his interest to make things work well, and to get rid of obsolete machinery. Even when his personal mitives are bad, a Casar or Napoleon has a sincera respect for facts, and a tendency to demolish ctions; whereas a ruler with a strong conscience and an inferior brain in the most likely of all men to justify a revolution. Hence the use of fools has very strictly defined limits, and we need never be afraid that the supply will not be quite equal to the demand. The pet name given at the clubs to Lord
